

Growing

Bananas do not grow on trees. They are actually the world's largest herb. After a banana plant makes fruit, it dies, and side shoots at the base are removed and replanted by hand. Bananas are now the only plant growing in soil where thousands of rain-forest species used to live.

Bananas do not grow on trees. They are actually the world's largest herb. After a banana plant makes fruit, it dies, and side shoots at the base are removed and replanted by hand. Bananas are now the only plant growing in soil where thousands of rain-forest species used to live.

Growing

Growing

Bananas do not grow on trees. They are actually the world's largest herb. After a banana plant makes fruit, it dies, and side shoots at the base are removed and replanted by hand. Bananas are now the only plant growing in soil where thousands of rain-forest species used to live.

Bananas do not grow on trees. They are actually the world's largest herb. After a banana plant makes fruit, it dies, and side shoots at the base are removed and replanted by hand. Bananas are now the only plant growing in soil where thousands of rain-forest species used to live.

Growing

